Glorious Old Santa Claus

is on his way to McCabe's and will be here every afternoon, excepting Saturday, from 2:30 to 3:30 o'clock, with a little souvenir for each of his little friends and his big, big book in which he will record the names of all good little boys and girls and make a list of their wants.

This is his advance—

Christmas Message for Everybody, Big and Little

"It is bad enough to see grown-up people worrying about the war. Of course, some of them just can't help it, for there are people that have just got to worry anyway, and if it wasn't about the war it would be about something else.

"But We Can at Least Keep the Children Out of the War"

"They shall have their Santa Claus and their toys and their Christmas trees; they shall hang up their stockings just the same as ever, and old Santa will fill them chock full of the prettiest things that ever were; they shall visit the lovely big Toy Store and see all the strange and wonderful things; they shall wake bright and early on the 25th of December and rush out and give everybody "Merry Christmas," and they shall have their blessed little hearts just filled up with happiness and lovingness for everybody."

And there you are! That settles it, we hope. It means that the children, at least, are to have a Christmas—

The Biggest and Bestest Christmas That Ever Was

We have believed all along that they would have it—and that is why we have ready right now for them to see—

The Biggest and Bestest Toy Store That Ever Was
